Feature Address Before Virginia State Farmers' Institute.

EXCURSION TO MODEL FARM

Delegates Enjoy Day at Ivor, Then Return to Their Homes,

> Times-Dispatch Bureau. 109 North Sycamore Street. Petersburg, Va., August 11.

Of all the addresses delivered before the Virginia State Farmers' Institute, that of Professor W. R. Beattle, of the United States Department of Agriculture, last night on "Peanut-Growing" was one of the most interesting. Like the kindred subject of "Tobacco-Growing," which had been previously discussed, it was one that very closely touched the farmers of Southside Virginia, where the crop is a staple one.

Professor Beattie was thoroughly acquainted with his subject in all its details, having made a specialty of the study of the cultivation of peanuts. He has just returned from a tour through the peanut sections of the South, extending through the Gulf States, where the planters are awakening to the importance of this crop. While in the Gulf States, he stated, only about 3,000 to 5,000 acres were planted in peanuts last year, mainly for hog-feeding purposes, this year the area has been extended to 20,000 acres. And he took occasion to solemnly warn Virginia planters that if they acres, And he took occasion to solemn-ly warn Virginia planters that if they want to keep the lead in raising and bandling the peanut crop, they must ____ up and doing. Professor Beattle stated that Europe annually consumes in the manufacture of oil alone double the quantity of peanuts raised in the United States, peanuts raised in the United States, the supplies coming from Africa, There are not enough peanuts raised in this country, considering the demands for other purposes, to justify the establishment of an oil factory.

Professor Beattle went into the details of the successful cultivation of the presunt crop. The preparation and

He gave various formulas as the best fertilizers for peanut land, and dwelt especially on the importance of selecting seed nuts. Too many planters are prone to neglect this matter, as important as that of selecting seed corn. His advice to each planter was to go through his fields frequently and stake off the most vigorous of the plants, and from these, as far as possible, select his seed. By this selection
